If neither wing of the bureaucracy can introduce decisive changes, then the economic stagnation and the general crisis of society will continue. But this hardly mattered to the bureaucracy so long as these were plentiful. The opponents of reform have sought to defend themselves by glorifying the Stalin era; even mild proponents of reform like Gorbachev have had to take issue with them over that – although Gorbachev still justifies the general line Stalin pursued. Theradicalreformersclaimthatonlyallowingindividualenterprisestococ There was no disagreement about the need for restructuring among the new generation of politburo and secretariat members; nor about the need to get rid of the Brezhnevites to achieve. By the end of this period, Ligachev was generally reckoned to be the second most powerful person in the party hierarchy.
