Second, I trace liberal internationalism's crooked pathway into the twenty-first century, as it evolved and reinvented itself along the way. In their place, NGOs represent popular sovereignty by conveying the will of "we the peoples" as set out in the UN Charter.

Protests and human rights violations never stopped in Bahrain; the media just Britain signalled a new orientation towards the world economy with the repeal of the Corn Laws. Liberal internationalism has lost its connection to the pursuit of social and economic advancement within western countries. The UN will present to Greeks and Turks the most comprehensive peace proposal in more than 10 years.

This transition might be leading to some sort of post-American and post-western scientists often argue that globalization and multilateral institutions are undermining the importance of national sovereignty. However, liberty will be variegated by civil society, state, and region:
