Branding a University Chris Chapleo There are two kinds of open access OA hee... Specifically, university middle management is tasked with extracting knowledge of the research process from academics, which is then systematised and given back to the academics in the form of policy procedures and performance management objectives. We are good at low-cost innovation and flexible start-ups but the long and patient process of getting a new technology to market is difficult. That is why it is right to put them under pressure to broaden access. Many critics pointed to the inevitability of such results within a risk-based system, especially as Ministers were ill-informed about alternative providers, and had made little effort to look at what had happened in other countries. This means two things:.
