Longfellow, -with Extracts from His Journals and Correspondence. Fir

The Roman of the first century had long bent the knee before his Caesars when the statues of Rome were still standing erect ; the temples continued holy to the eye when their gods had long been a laughing-stock, and the abominations of a Nero and Commodus were silently rebuked by the style of the edifice which lent them its concealment. Kogel very truly says, in reference to his restoration, " Es bleibt noch viel zu thun iibrig," and we may add that it must remain a hopeless task to clear away all the difficulties without the accession of new MS.
