The thread groove around the head of the bobbin or upper end of its spindle just next to the spreading head flange, is laid in front of and against the cable. This bunch is held in one hand while the last inch of work and pins are removed from the pattern. The meshes thus formed are six-sided, having two braided sides and four twisted ones. Each pair is twisted between crossings and each crossing is supported by a pin. THIS top coat has saved me... I get a mani ones a month and do them myself in. long. After working the weaving pair through the bottom of an open diamond to the right of its former position, the threads should be very gingerly pulled into a smooth twist, not touching or coaxing the weaver until the other threads are right, then using this pair again as the weaver for the next cutwork below at the right.
