The natural gender of a noun, pronoun or noun phrase is a gender to which it would be expected to belong based on relevant attributes of its referent. A sentence is a combination of words that expresses a thought, and in its simplest form is the statement of a single fact. In the Dravidian languages nouns are classified primarily on the basis of their semantic properties.

Such properties include animacy or inanimacy, "humanness" or non-humanness is again a significant factor. However, the agreement between the adjective and its noun does not mean that they must have the same termination.
