Along the footpath, between walls of fast-ripening wheat, all sprinkled with drowsy poppies and blue-eyed speedwell, I strode with a gay heart, singing aloud as I went, until I crossed the stile into the Dover road. Together, they are shamanic students and practitioners, specializing in the art of psychopomp and other related spirit work.

His aspect impressed me disagreeably at once, I could hardly say why, except that

These posts were, of course, the timbers of some old wreck, and this large one her stem-post with the figure-head still attached and held upright by the buried keel. To tell the truth, I had, up to now, given very little thought to the risk to which I was exposing Toby; and now it was too late.

I can see the old kitchen, wide and low-ceiled, and crossed by a blackened beam

I reflected upon this fact, I began to waver in my resolution of calling upon Mr Murking, for I could not but perceive that my condition was one to awaken suspicion, even if none previously existed; indeed I cannot now tell why I was so set upon reviving this acquaintance, excepting that the ship was on the point of sailing, and that no other means of escape presented. For, as I sat, alternately peering down the road and round the fields, my mind seethed with a hundred wild and disturbing conjectures.
