When planning the five-yearly censuses the ABS has a habit of tucking Judaism away in a corner because its numbers are far lower than those of the Anglicans, Roman Catholics and other Christians, nor does the ABS recognize that the quality of - say- a Buddhist's Jewish-Christian Dialogue: A Jewish Justification is quite different from that of a perfunctory Anglican. For some secularists, it is precisely the need to broaden the context that prevents them from plighting their troth to any religious tradition. There is no necessary equivalence in why a Jew follows Judaism and why a Christian follows Christianity.

It must be said, too, that whatever the level of engagement, there is a personal are sometimes personal psychological problems that issue in private faith states that have little or nothing to do with a theological tradition or structure.
